

FERIA DE MÁLAGA · 15–22 AUGUST

What not to do at Feria

For eight days Málaga throws the biggest party in the south: two ferias in one city, casetas that never ask for a ticket, and a pink bottle with a reputation. Most visitors get at least three of these wrong in their first afternoon. Here's the list — and what to do instead.

save this for the week 🌸

BY LUCY RIVERO · @ITSLUCYINTHESOUTH

The eight mistakes

1 Looking for the party in the centre at night

The day feria ends at 18:00 sharp and the centre empties. After dark it all happens at El Real \(Cortijo de Torres\), until around six in the morning.

2 Skipping the day feria entirely

The other classic. From about 13:00 Calle Larios has live verdiales — Málaga's own folk music — and the old-town squares run concerts until 18:00. Do both halves.

3 Drinking Cartojal like it's sangria

Sweet, ice cold and 15% — stronger than most wine you drink at home, and it goes down like juice. Pace yourself, and eat.

4 Queuing for taxis, or worse, driving

Bus F links the centre and El Real 24 hours a day for €2 — cash or card only; travel passes aren't accepted. Sixteen more night lines run 20:00–06:00 from every district.

5 Assuming the casetas are private

That's Seville's fair. In Málaga free entry is the rule — if it sounds good, walk in. Nobody will stop you.

6 Wandering the centre in beachwear

City ordinance, fines up to €750. Ten minutes away on the seafront nobody blinks. It's about where, not what.

7 Planning a normal Wednesday on the 19th

It's a local holiday and the fair's big day — the whole city is out. Lean in or stay by the pool; there is no in-between.

8 Carrying your whole life with you

A million people is a million people. Phone zipped, small cash, bag worn in front in the crush. Boring advice that works.

The perfect feria day

11:00

Beach first

The feria doesn't wake up before you do. Morning swim, slow breakfast — you're saving your legs for a sixteen-hour day.

13:00

Calle Larios, for the verdiales

Groups from the three provincial styles play daily on Larios, 13:00–17:00 — hats stacked with flowers, ribbons and tiny mirrors, fiddles and cymbals. You will not hear this anywhere else on earth.

14:30

First Cartojal, in the shade

Small glass, ice cold, with something to eat beside it. The squares — Constitución, Las Flores, Obispo — all have music until 18:00.

16:30

Retreat before it closes

The centre winds down at 18:00 anyway. Leave while it's still good.

17:30

Siesta. Non-negotiable

The night runs until six. The locals sleep now, and the locals are the ones still dancing at five.

20:30

Dress up, catch Bus F

Night feria is dressed-up feria — summer dresses and shirts, not beach clothes. €2, cash or card, straight to the fairground.

21:30

Walk in under the portada

The lit gate of El Real is the photo of the week. Behind it: a temporary city of casetas, lights and noise that runs till dawn.

22:30

Caseta-hop

Free entry, remember. Follow the music you like — flamenco in one, pop in the next, sevillanas two doors down. Eat where the locals are standing three deep.

1:00

The cacharritos

The funfair side of El Real: the big wheel gives you the whole glowing city of the fair in one view.

5:30

Churros before bed

Hot chocolate and churros as the sky goes pale. This is how a feria day officially ends — anything earlier is surrender.

Verdiales on Calle Larios: Málaga's own music, daily 13:00–17:00 during feria. 🌸

WHAT TO ORDER

Drink and eat the feria

Cartojal

kar-to-HAL

THE feria drink: a pale sweet moscatel with its own Denominación de Origen, in the unmissable pink bottle. Served at 6–8°C, by the glass everywhere. It is 15% — respect it and it will respect you.

Espetos

es-PEH-tos

Sardines on a cane skewer, grilled over an open fire in the beach chiringuitos — and August is their best month. The classic feria-week lunch before the evening shift.

Pescaíto frito

pes-ka-EE-to FREE-to

Málaga's mixed fried fish — boquerones, calamares, adobo. Order a mix for the table in any caseta doing food and eat it standing up like everyone else.

Churros & chocolate

CHU-ros

The dawn ritual. When the casetas finally wind down, the churros stands are where the whole fair ends up. Thick chocolate, no apologies, then bed.

✿ Lucy's golden rule: alternate. One Cartojal, one water, something fried in between. The people still standing at 6 am aren't tougher than you — they're just better at pacing.

Say it like a local

Feria

FEH-ree-ah

The fair — but for eight days it's less an event than a way of life. "¿Vas a la feria?" is the only small talk you need.

El Real

el reh-AL

The fairground at Cortijo de Torres, where the night feria lives. "The Real" — locals never say the full name.

Caseta

ka-SEH-ta

The tents-slash-clubhouses of the Real. In Málaga, free to enter — that word is doing a lot of work in this guide.

Biznaga

biz-NA-ga

Jasmine buds pinned onto a dried thistle stalk — Málaga's flower, sold by biznagueros in white. It perfumes a whole street.

Verdiales

behr-DYA-les

Málaga's ancient folk style: fiddles, cymbals, and hats piled with flowers, ribbons and mirrors. On Larios every feria afternoon.

Cartojal

kar-to-HAL

Order it by name, ice cold ("bien frío"). Asking for sangria at feria marks you instantly.

Farolillo

fa-ro-LEE-yo

The paper lanterns strung over every street. When the farolillos go up in early August, the whole city starts counting down the days.

¡Qué arte!

keh AR-teh

"What art!" — the highest compliment in Andalusia. For dancers, singers, or anyone doing anything with style.

Why Wednesday the 19th 🌸 The fair commemorates 19 August 1487, when Málaga was incorporated into the Crown of Castile by the Catholic Monarchs — which is why the 19th is a local holiday and the feria's big day. Shops close, the city sleeps in, and by night the Real is as full as it gets all week.

The €750 rule, in full 🌸 Málaga's coexistence ordinance allows fines up to €750 for walking the city centre in swimwear or bare-chested. On the seafront and at the beach bars nobody cares — the line is the old town. During feria week, when the centre is one big party at 2 pm, it's the easiest mistake to make.

See you at the feria

Eight days, two ferias, one city that refuses to sleep. If this guide saves you one taxi queue or one Cartojal headache, it's done its job. Tag me from a caseta — I want to know which mistake you almost made.

✿ @itslucyinthesouth

Photos: RubiMA1, Jeronimo Palacios, Montuno, jmsolerb, teclasorg · Wikimedia Commons · CC BY 2.0/3.0